INTRODUCTION

Skills development and employment promotion are central to Rwanda's transformative Vision 2050, aiming to secure high standards of living for all Rwandans. To achieve this goal, Rwanda must build a dynamic and capable workforce, meeting the rising demand for high-skilled jobs. Technical and Vocational Education Training (TVET) has a key role to play on the country's aforementioned agenda as it aims at equipping people with know-how, hands on skills and/or competences required in particular occupations or more broadly in the labour market for the jobs of today and tomorrow.

High-quality technical and Vocational Education and Training systems that have a strong work-based learning element facilitate young people's transition to work and contribute to reducing unemployment and supporting economic development. TVET is also a powerful means of empowering people to develop their full capabilities, enabling them to seize social and employment opportunities, and increasing the productivity of both workers and enterprises. TVET institutions are major suppliers of workforce who will be in the forefront in dealing directly with sustainable issues as the better education and training is also necessary for decent work and socially sustainable, fair growth.

TVET and skills policies include formal, non-formal and informal vocational learning, workplace and work-based learning, and other learning opportunities in the formal and informal economies. These policies support a life-long learning approach to economic growth, and good employment and social objectives.

TRAINING PROGRAMS

New era requires upgrade in skills, it compulsorily requires the focus to the technical and vocational for competences to create strong competent workforce with real life values and innovation as per labor market demand for any country economic development.

Globalization and the technological development are moving at a fast pace in countries around the world. This affects the nature of working positions and occupations and the types and characteristic of the skills that are required.

TVET is central to the accumulation of the human resources as a requisite for achieving the economic growth and better employability, mobility and safety at the work place. TVET encourages the development of competences of the young people and adults that addresses the needs of the modern, flexible and competitive labour market.

High quality TVET with good links to the labour market is essential for encouraging inclusive and sustainable growth and enabling the country to diversify its economies and provide decent work. The TVET modernization process has begun with developing a clear picture of the programs focusing on sectors with a high employment potential namely; Construction and building services, Energy, Technical services, Hospitality and Tourism, ICT and Multimedia, Arts and Crafts, Agriculture and Food processing, Transport and logistics, Manufacturing and Mining, Beauty and Aesthetics and aligning TVET policy with national economic development plans. TVET programs have been streamlined in order to articulate the pathways and ensure demand-driven, growth-oriented and technology led work.
